Communications does not have programs. It receives content and tells the story. Every photo, every caption, every post is how E100 connects with the world — and how it shows partners, donors, and the community what their investment produces. This department operates with more Exec Board oversight than any other.

THE STRUCTURAL REALITY

Comms is a service department. It does not create programs — it amplifies them. The quality of what Comms can post is entirely dependent on the quality of what Chairs and committees submit. A Comms team cannot tell a story without content. Every Chair in the org has a responsibility to feed this machine.

The current gap: Chairs are inconsistent in submitting content and captions. Approval from Exec Board sometimes creates delays. The result: moments that should be celebrated publicly go unposted, and the org's story goes untold. This playbook defines the process that closes that gap on both sides.

Exec Board oversight is intentional. More than any other department, what E100 posts publicly represents the org's brand, values, and relationships. President and VP must approve before anything goes live. This is the right call — but the approval process must be fast enough not to kill timeliness.
